Founded in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, by Bill and Sue Peters, JMJCaseworks has been crafting high-end, fully customized millwork and casework since 2007. They offer custom cabinets, countertops, divider walls, elevator surrounds, and other products for the medical, government, commercial, and education industries.

Now managed by son Jason Peters and his wife Deanna, JMJCaseworks is proud to be family-owned and run. “The most rewarding thing about working for JMJCaseworks is the family atmosphere and the fact that they truly care about their employees and their families,” Purchasing Manager Alice Upshaw said. “We all work together to make JMJCaseworks the best it can be.”

Being a family business doesn’t mean that JMJCaseworks is limited in what they can deliver, however—their state-of-the-art manufacturing facility and experienced team of estimators, drafters, programmers, project managers, and craftsmen mean that they produce only the highest-quality work.

They also pride themselves on their ability to provide top-quality results on projects of any size. “The great thing about JMJCaseworks is our ability to complete projects ranging in size from one room to an entire medical facility, school, or office building,” Upshaw said.

JMJCaseworks sought out FSC certification so they would be able to bid on projects requiring FSC materials. Certification also gave them a competitive edge in their market. “There are very few commercial cabinet shops in our state that are FSC certified,” Upshaw said. “It gives us a slight advantage, and we take pride in the quality of product that we manufacture.”

After managing the individual FSC certification on their own, however, JMJCaseworks needed faster answers to their questions and a simpler way to manage their certification. So, they contacted American Green Consulting and joined one of AGC’s group certificates.

“The biggest difference in having the group certificate is that the individual one felt like we were just a number and they got back to us when they wanted,” Upshaw said. “The group certificate seems like they care about us as an organization, and things don’t take as long to get accomplished. American Green Consulting has made our life 85 percent better. They’re there to help, and they offer a better price and overall better service.”

American Green Consulting is proud to be able to assist JMJCaseworks in maintaining their FSC certification. We look forward to seeing what they do next!
